Biking with the Sun

You may have seen some unusual looking bikes riding through downtown Sioux Falls Monday morning.

The bikers were part of the Green Bike Tour, a group from Iowa that rides around the Midwest demonstrating renewable forms of energy. The bikes use solar energy to increase power in their motors by as much 200 percent when pedaling.

But group members say they're not just out to show off their hi-tech rides.

David Osterberg says, "We're all over, and the message is the same; Global warming is real. You have to do something about it, and whether that's wind power or efficient buildings, it has to be done."

The bikers' next stop is Sioux City before heading down to Nebraska.
